Regather is a powerful, easy-to-use Windows application that will allow you to recover and transform data in a disk drive and drives into image formats. If you want to have a quick overview of the files stored in your hard disk or USB flash drives, Regather is a powerful utility.Q: Using window.open() in a normal I'm working on a new JavaScript application and need a popup window for my application, It works fine in IE, Firefox and Chrome, but in Opera, Google Chrome and Safari the window pops up in a white blank page. Does anyone know why and how to work around this? JavaScript code: window.open("terms.html", "popup", "width=450, height=320, resizable, scrollbars"); Thanks for reading. A: You're setting a URL but you never tell the window what to open there. You've been given a tip about changing it to "terms.html?popup", but it's really not even close to what you should be doing. That doesn't fix the fact that you have no telling how that URL will appear in your users' browsers, it will show, after a fashion, like this: /terms.html?popup but this will have the same result, at least for some users and definitely for your users if your app is used on intranet sites: /terms.html?popup /terms.html And for those who don't realize they're redirecting in the first place, and will click on the link they believe they're going to visit, you'll get a 404. So, you need a way to make that URL actually refer to an external resource, where you can put your own terms and conditions. You'll need a policy document. For instance, Amazon's terms and conditions look like this: Terms and Conditions Your favorite WiiWare game will be released in Japan next week for Nintendo Wii on June 2nd! We had a chance to speak with Takehiko Okada, producer of the Nintendo game Wario Land 4, and ask him all about the game. Wario Land 4 will have a very cool story, how have you come up with the story of 6a5afdab4c
