Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a semiconductor device having a plurality of channels or gates formed of monocrystalline semiconductor formed on a surface of a monocrystalline semiconductor substrate, and a method for producing the same. 2. Description of the Related Art The invention relates to a semiconductor device in which monocrystalline semiconductor is formed on a surface of a monocrystalline semiconductor substrate such as a wafer, and more specifically, to a semiconductor device having a large number of channels or gates formed of monocrystalline semiconductor having an improved isolation characteristic, and a method for producing the same. Recently, a semiconductor device having a high density and a large number of gates or channels formed of monocrystalline semiconductor has been developed with the progress in the art of multi-channeling, etc., in the field of semiconductor devices using a thin-film technique. One of the large-channeled monocrystalline semiconductor devices has been realized in which the number of gates is equal to or larger than 250. Such a semiconductor device is generally known as a Large Scale Integration (LSI) circuit. To realize such a LSI circuit, an active region in which the LSI circuit is to be formed must be selected out of an originally isolated region. That is, it is necessary to employ an isolation structure having an excellent isolation characteristic. For this purpose, it has been general to use an isolation structure comprising a stacked oxide film formed by thermally oxidizing a monocrystalline semiconductor substrate. However, in recent years, there has been developed a monocrystalline silicon LSI device in which monocrystalline silicon is used as a monocrystalline semiconductor substrate and an isolation
