House Speaker Paul Ryan, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, and their staffs prepared for the daily war between Trump and the other candidates. But one week ago, Trump became the Republican nominee. Then, Trump capped his week by openly praising Vladimir Putin's brutal regime for Russian cyber-attacks on our election systems. Suddenly, the political horserace and the horse race that Trump has been touting for months has turned into a sprint, with a standoff between Trump and the security of our nation on the line. One could not help but feel that Trump's sentiments are so out of step with the majority of Americans that he would be wiser to be silent on the issue. The Republican leadership should have known that Trump would make such a remark, yet in a full display of political courage, they have chosen to join him in praising Putin. The only way to stop this train wreck of a campaign and the damage that is being done to our country is for the Republican leadership to rally around Donald Trump and put the nation first. The chairman of the Republican National Committee, Reince Priebus, has been silent on the issue. His surrogates such as Bush and McCain have been equally weak in their criticism. A change of leadership in the RNC would be a dramatic change in the party and the country and would only be a little like the moment when Reagan came to the presidency of the United States. The party should not care about preserving any political future for any of the candidates and should be willing to drop them all for the good of the party and the country. One has to wonder why most of the people leading the GOP are not getting this message and are now silent with respect to the debacle they have created. There is nothing stopping them from getting off their asses and speaking out against this man, this week, and then publicly and privately getting behind him to lead the party and the nation.
