I want to update a single piece of it (show/hide a picture on click), so I can't simply download the file and update it. There is a comment on that file of the web page, which points to a local js file with the same name. The JS file, however, is not the right one (the one I need to update). It seems that the server did not properly extract the js file, only a fragment of it is extracted. It is missing everything past an undefined variable to loading of another file. So far, the js file that makes the slideshow is somewhere inside here: and I'm trying to edit the following part of the code: But I cannot open it because it's not a normal file. I tried to open the file with all of these windows: Windows Explorer Microsoft Edge Chrome Firefox (don't forget that this site is compromised, so I can't use Windows normal web browser.) The only file type that opens is this: .html I tried the following extensions: .js .txt .php .html .htm 3da54e8ca3
