Screenshots: Papers, Scissors, Punched Cards, and a Few Other Interesting Things This time I have a modest tutorial on manipulating paper related to programming. These tricks include paper in a jar, folded paper, and paper cards. Most of these are a breeze for the experienced programmer, and for the rest are not too difficult. A click of a button is enough to accomplish these. Paper in a Jar There are some simple ways of creating paper in a jar. If we are making paper in a jar we will first need paper. What type of paper? Well, that depends on the kind of problem you are solving. A credit card is a good choice since it is thick, doesn't tear easily, and won't bend without breaking. A really thin piece of notebook paper and then using a narrow piece of tape are another way of creating paper in a jar. Now that we have the paper you will need to display it to the user. As an example, let's suppose we have a game that uses a dice and paper for defining the result of a game. You can use a large piece of paper and fold it in half. When the player clicks on a button you will want the user to put the piece of paper in the jar. What you are doing is creating a paper. Once the paper is in the jar you will need to fold the paper to make sure it's shown in portrait mode. Paper Cards To create paper cards you need a marker and some paper. To do this you should draw the number you wish to show on the piece of paper. It could be a number 1 to a number N, it could be a word, or a phrase. Just remember to add a small space so that the user can see the number you made. If you don't add this space, the user will have to guess what the number is. If you are making a game then you will need to add some GUI logic for displaying the number to the user. It is really 09e8f5149f
