This invention relates to a system for direct milling of bone. More particularly, it relates to an improved reamer-irrigator-irrigator combination used in bone surgery for reaming the intramedullary canal of a long bone in an efficient and expeditious manner. For several decades, the standard method for restoring the length of a bone or joint has been to attach a metal rod to the bone through a hole drilled into the bone for this purpose. The rod provides both the necessary structural strength for supporting the joint or body, and the necessary stability to allow healing of the bone without relative motion between the bone and the rod. While this method has been used successfully to restore the length of bones, it has many disadvantages. The rod itself is fairly rigid and is unable to slide over the outer wall of the drilled hole, resulting in a potential inhibition of the healing process, and even in irritation of the healing tissue. Additionally, the rod is unable to move flexibly relative to the bone, again inhibiting healing. Furthermore, once implanted, the rod can only be inserted straight and must be rotated so as to avoid perforating the bones or damaging the tissue in the event it becomes necessary to replace it. The necessity of drilling a hole in the bone means that the supporting bone cells are removed, resulting in the eventual loosening of the implant and bone failure. The use of threaded fasteners to attach the rod to the bone also carries the risk of damaging the bone. The use of bone screws is also well known in the art for attaching a rod to bone. While screws do not require a pre-drilled hole, they still require surgery to position the screw in the bone, often requiring multiple cuts in the bone to ensure correct location, insertion and orientation of the screw. Even with the assistance of an image intensifier, the accuracy of the surgeon's efforts at determining the correct position of the screw is difficult and time-consuming. Furthermore, the use of bone screws means that a significant amount of the bone is removed at the point of attachment, the bone is weakened, and the screw threads must be oversized to provide stability for preventing loosening of the implant. The success of such surgical methods for restoring the length of a bone or joint has been dependent on the use of strong metals and alloys, and the skill of the surgeon. It would be desirable to provide a method for reaming the intramedullary canal of a bone, to minimize trauma to the tissues, and reduce the

Q: How to import data into a table from a sqlite database? I am having trouble importing data into my Android project from a SQLite database. I've already enabled the WRITE_EXTERNAL_STORAGE permission for my app in its AndroidManifest.xml file. I have also created a database using the SQLite ADB tool. As a test, I'm trying to import into a table of mine, called, 'colors.db' in the database. The code I am using is: @Override protected void onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); setContentView(R.layout.activity_main); btn = (Button) findViewById(R.id.button); btn.setOnClickListener(new View.OnClickListener() { @Override public void onClick(View v) { // TODO Auto-generated method stub try { copyDataToDB(); } catch (IOException ex) { Log.d("PROBLEM", "copyDataToDB - " + ex.toString()); } Toast.makeText(getApplicationContext(), "Congratulations, you just imported some color data to the database.", Toast.LENGTH_
