messaging has become an everyday occurrence.
It is used in every aspect of a person's life. It is used to exchange a variety of information.

For instance, text messaging is used for communicating, entertaining, and so on.

In order to keep an active text messaging session, the person may need to have the text messaging application (e.g., text messaging client application) open and ready to receive incoming text messages. However, many people find it difficult to keep an active text messaging client application open, active, and ready to receive incoming text messages for extended periods of time. For example, a person may open a text messaging application to check for new text messages; however, may only read the new text messages and may not want to be interrupted in the middle of reading the text messages. Accordingly, the person may switch to another application and close the active text messaging application.

Subsequently, the person may forget the active text messaging application, and when the person wants to check for new text messages, the person must access the text messaging application.

Therefore, a new text messaging application is needed that is not limited to being open and ready to receive new text messages, is easy to access, can display all messages received, and is capable of being customized and
