The OED reports to the County Council. It is headed by County Council Chairman Joey Manahan, also chair of the Tourism Development Authority. Kim said the OED is divided into various divisions that do not clearly identify their functions. "I think that it is time for the OED to be put under one umbrella and to really focus on economic development, and that is really where it should be," Kim said. The OED's future was one of the big themes of Tuesday's Civil Beat Live discussion. Kim and former state Sen. Rosalie Baker were also on the panel, along with reporter Chad Habib, who moderated. During the discussion, county officials confirmed that their biggest hurdle to OED's future is a shift in funding from the federal government to the state government. The County of Hawaii recently signed two agreements with state tourism officials to partner with the Hawaii Tourism Authority, rather than the U.S. Department of Commerce and U.S. Department of Commerce, NOAA. The OED's funding has been primarily from the U.S. Department of Commerce. The U.S. Department of Commerce still has a role in the matter because the local tourism districts would need to be approved by the U.S. Department of Commerce. An agreement signed in October 2018 called for Hawaii County to receive $1.75 million in 2020-2021, the first year of a five-year deal. In 2024, the county will be funded at $2.95 million. Another agreement has been signed for $1.5 million in 2021-2022 and $2.95 million in 2023-2024. The Trump administration has cut spending and new hires at the Commerce Department, which has caused concern among tourism officials in the state. "The most important issue is the funding," Kim said. "We
