Q: Is it possible to chain values from a function in Python? I want to be able to write something like the following in Python 2.7:

def some_function(): return x, y, z, f(x, y, z)

print some_function() and get the following result: (x, y, z, f(x, y, z))

Of course, I can write it the long way and explicitly call the function, as per:

print some_function()[0]
print some_function()[1]
print some_function()[2]
print some_function()[3]

Is there a simple way to do this more effectively?

A: Almost always, the answer is "no". You're probably looking for something like this: `def some_function():`

`return (x, y, z, f(x, y, z))` print
some
