To observe is to gaze, to see things as they are. To create is to imagine, to make a distinct object for your own purposes. The distinction is that observing could be done without creation, but not the other way round. Does the question of being an observer mean that we are not creating? That is the view we express as good question. We believe it could be. An observer creates. A creator observes. An observer creates the observer. A creator observes the creator. I've seen that the WebKit.WebView class expose a canvas element, so is there a Javascript library to do that? I'm using the Gecko engine because it is easier to enable the canvas element, but I'd like to use the WebKit engine. The Gecko engine seems quite unresponsive, while the WebKit engine is quite responsive. Thanks for any help. A: Adobe's Closure library is quite good at this sort of thing: It has the benefit of being well tested and is extensively used.
