WASHINGTON — For the first time in U.S. history, the number of people on food stamps is equal to the size of the country's workforce. And yet, you won't find them singing "America the Beautiful." Instead, they take their food stamps and buy a Nintendo 3DS. The game console, perhaps the most popular and lucrative game system of the last five years, was retailing for $150 for a basic model, and even more for advanced models with more games. In a stretch when some companies boast a 1,000 percent profit margin, Nintendo had a 13 percent profit margin. Despite that bonanza, consumers and retail analysts told NBC News they did not expect the company's latest model, the $250 system, would take off. "I just don't know how that's going to pan out," said Sarah Arndt, a 25-year-old technology blogger in San Diego. "I just don't see people lining up around the block to buy one." Nintendo is the rare game-console maker that is not just selling more than it makes, but is also selling more games at higher price points, fueling an increase in the total number of U.S. games sold, according to a report by Goldman Sachs analyst David Gibson. Since the launch of the Wii, Nintendo's first mass-market video game system, in 2006, the company has sold a total of 151 million consoles worldwide, more than the next three game makers combined, according to the analyst. Among the Wii, Nintendo released a version with tennis, boxing and golf games, a version that could be used as a portable game console and one that could be controlled by the Wii Remote, the classic game controller. The launch of the New Nintendo 3DS, a new 3-D gaming system, in March, was not well-received by some key industry players because it is a lesser version of the 3DS. In June, Nintendo introduced a $200 version of the 3DS called the Nintendo 2DS, which does not have a screen and is only compatible with games for the basic 3DS. But the New 3DS model, released in August, has sold more than the launch of the previous-generation system, according to Nintendo. According to the Goldman Sachs report, more than 40 percent of the games sold in the U

Studies on the interaction between folic acid and some drugs: The results of an immuno-assay and LC-MS analyses. The present study aimed to perform an "in vitro" determination of the interaction between folic acid (FA) and some common drugs by means of an immuno-assay (IA) and liquid chromatography coupled with high resolution mass spectrometry (LC-HRMS). We used 3 microL of a water/acetonitrile/formic acid solution (2:1:1 v/v) as the extraction solvent for the detection of the FA and its corresponding protein binding fraction (PB) by means of IA (competitive immuno-assay). For the first time, the results of the single-laboratory validation showed a desirable accuracy and precision for the proposed method (Intra-Assay Variation \leq 1.33%; Inter-Assay Variation \leq 5.83%). Relative recovery (\leq 8.06%) and matrix effects (\leq 7.14%) were also satisfactory, and the method was linear in the range from 100 μ g L⁻¹ to 5 mg L⁻¹ and from 5 mg L⁻¹ to 5 mg L⁻¹, respectively. Consequently, the analytes were diluted in the range from 0.5 μ g L⁻¹ to 5 mg L⁻¹. The proposed method was successfully applied to the determination of FA in plasma samples after direct deproteination with acetonitrile, providing satisfactory recoveries (75.6-96.8%) and good precision (In a water treatment process the primary objective is to remove undesirable particulate, organic and/or inorganic impurities and suspended solids from water. Water may be treated to remove or control a wide variety of contaminants. Such contaminants include, but are not limited to, non-degradable, high molecular weight, organic compounds (e.g., phenolic and non-phenolic, volatile organic compounds (VOCs
