Blend feels like a game you've seen before. It was made to be a pleasant experience, but still a fun game to play with friends. You can create a unique experience for your players by adding functionality to the game board, most notably by adding your own set of custom tiles, like a clothing store. Feed your players, have them pick their favorite items on a special menu, or offer them discounts based on their wage. Take any concept, from any game, and mix it up with your own. Difficulty: This game is suitable for casual gamers. If your players are more experienced, they can get an enjoyable challenge out of it, too. What Works: This game implements a lot of well-known mechanics without coming off as bad. The unique tiles help add fun and can make every game a different experience. What Doesn't: There is no matchmaking mechanic. This makes the game harder to play with more than two people as the initial setup and characters are the only means to direct your players' attention. Graphics: Of course, this is a free app. But when it comes to visual quality, I am not complaining. All the tiles and basic objects are presented very well. Sound: The sound effects and music are quite reminiscent of a game from the 80's. As such, we don't get much music. There is one song that plays while the game is loading and a couple of songs to add a little atmosphere to the game board, but the music doesn't really capture the feelings of a shopping experience. Play as the Romans or Egyptian, and try your luck in collecting the best treasures and items for your own store. Play as a merchant or a shopper, learn to predict your opponents' next moves, or just play for the fun. Trade up or down cards in your shop and challenge your opponents to a game of cards. Create your own deck, or use items from a shop to customize your deck. Turn your shop into the best possible trading center, or just enjoy the experience with a few friends. Features: Four different single players. Opponents can be controlled by computer or by a friend. Two types of shops: customizable and non-customizable. Two types of shops: Complete or blank. Customizable shops are useful, but additional items to open and close more shops are in order. Start with a small deck of 20 cards

It's not a rule, but using the same tileset for a number of objects is a good idea. This means no need to create a new resource every time you need a new object! I created a package of about 20 tileset resources for my recent bestseller RPG Maker VX Ace: Sword Rock Village. With this package you should be able to get most of the shops and their items. What's included in this package: -More than 20 new tile sets + tileset variants -Selectable files for mobile phones -Selectable files for tablets -Selectable files for computers NOTE There are 2 different sets of tiles for Clothing Store. One set is designed to look like the Mens' T-Shirt or Sweatshirts. NOTE 2 The building tileset has 2 versions. One version is designed for the top floor of the store and the other one is designed for the bottom floor of the store. --- Difficulty - Beginner The files are included in the zip folder. --- --- I'm sure you'll love it! For a modern grocery store, an increase of a few more levels is not unrealistic.Clothing Store Material Level:When the clothing store opens, it's fully stocked with a few of the most commonly used items. Therefore, it can be more difficult to add in new items. It's best to add in new items as part of an upgrade. For a modern clothing store, an increase of a few more levels is not unrealistic. Roving Guard Materials: Stores need to have some form of security, which is why a guard is recommended. Fighter Materials: For a modern store, a fully armored guard may be too much, but an undistracted guard makes a good backup to the main security. Cashier Materials: Guards are too expensive to fill the position of a cashier, so it's best to hire someone else. Convenience Store Info: The convenience store operates as a convenience store. Players can find a lot of goods there that are helpful for quests and they're generally easier to sell than items from

What's new:

- Tutorial You have 3 text fields in your product line. One for a short text name, one which contains some more description text, and a third one for a description full of long sentences. Well, as it turns out, you can also create an EditorWindow from it. You need to know what's happening in this tiny window, so we recommend reading the following article: EditorWindow: The Beginners Guide. So here's how it is basically done: Where to begin? What's the purpose of this EditorWindow? First of all, it provides methods to edit your product line immediately without you having to open MP... How do I use this EditorWindow? Well, you can use the EditorWindow.Open() method to open the editor. At first, you'd add the EditorWindow.Open() from the line that's calling your Update() method (in our case, the UpButton_Click() method of the ProductList form). At the end of the code that's calling Update(), you'll remove the EditorWindow.Open() again so that it doesn't stay open and continue to drain resources while the form is still open. Only for returning products?! What is GetLines() all about? This method returns an array of all the lines in a block of text. The first line is the ID of the first line and the following lines are the next ones in line with the ID of the previous line... The GetLine method takes the character type of the first line. If the first line is a sentence, you get a string of all letters. In that case, you get all the text until the next newline. Otherwise you get all the text until the first place where the second line starts. And the `GetLine()` method is used only for returning text from the text fields. Since you only use these fields for displaying pretty texts, you don't need to display the lines in a list. You don't want it to look like it would be looked at by a human, right? Just handle the line array and print the first line as a special item. That's it! How do I do it? `Update()` method `Update()` manages all the text for you. Since it's a line of code, it's pretty much straight forward. Besides `Text` which holds the name
