Angiotensin is a potent inhibitor of tumour angiogenesis, which has the potential to be developed into an anti-cancer therapeutic. To examine the feasibility of angiotensin-loaded glutathione-capped gold nanoparticles (AuNPs) as a drug delivery system, angiotensin was complexed to gold nanoparticles by simply mixing a 30% v/v aqueous solution of angiotensin and a 10% v/v aqueous solution of AuNPs at room temperature for 48 h. The complex was then cross-linked with the cross-linking agent, 1-ethyl-3-(3-dimethylaminopropyl) carbodiimide hydrochloride (EDC), in order to evaluate the feasibility of use as a protein-based drug delivery system. The complex was then characterized to assess size, molecular weight and zeta potential. The drug-loading capacity of the AuNPs was found to be
