be compelled to provide user data to governments in response to criminal subpoenas or in connection with an investigation, regardless of whether we have any genuine knowledge about the relevant user.” Facebook also said, “In order to achieve this, we have updated our terms to make it clear that we will not provide information about a user to authorities for purposes of enforcing such laws.” Here is the legal section of Facebook’s privacy policy, as of December 3, 2018: Section 3. Government Requests We will disclose any information about you to government entities or public institutions with respect to enforcement of or requests made under: (a) the Digital Millennium Copyright Act, (b) the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, (c) any other relevant law or regulation, or (d) the regulation of communication common carriers, as defined in the Communications Act, or with respect to any licensing activity or any investigation or other law enforcement activity. It is important to note that in Facebook’s policy, it prohibits supplying any information about users to “authorities” for the purposes of enforcing any law. A key distinction between this policy and what Facebook stated on December 3, 2018, is the absence of any reference to any court order or judicial order. Rather, Facebook is acting according to a unilateral policy decision, and we urge Facebook to correct its policy.
