: Who Really Makes A Difference For Animals? July 14, 2016

What role do humans play in the lives of animals? It's easy to agree that animals are important, and most of us would agree that saving and protecting them makes a difference in the world and in people's lives. This question is becoming increasingly relevant to students of animal welfare and natural history. It is even more relevant to those who love animals and want to help their survival. "Gather ye rosebuds while ye may, Old time is still a-flying." After thousands of years, human beings have suddenly ended the world as most know it. Faced with an immediate need, what are we going to do? We have, almost overnight, become the new "Natural Selector." While people, plants and animals are all in danger, humans as a species seem to be at even greater risk of extinction. That makes everything we humans do, including our relationship with animals, extremely important in the struggle for survival. Let us look carefully and honestly at our role in the world in relation to animals, and how, in a short time, we have disrupted everything that was. Since the beginning of the human race the world has always been changing. This is the life cycle of nature. The world had everything This world was perfect. Animals, plants and everything in nature was in harmony with itself and with other animals. It was a perfect balance, just as we look at it today in the world of the universe in our galaxy. Without any doubt, we are part of this perfect picture. We did not and do not, and shall never exist as islands, cut off from the rest of the natural world. We are part of the world. Our globe and our life cycle We have come a long way. For starters, we live in a different environment. This includes a completely different climate, a completely different world, and a different way of life. The world of the year 200 A.D., or the year A.D. 1604, had a completely different climate, in which animals and plants no longer existed. For example, Greenland had ice thousands of feet below the surface of the sea - there were no animals or plants and no snow! Historians and archivists are now able to see in this new soil everything that was alive in the world
