Diltiazem was given to four patients with arterial hypertension in order to evaluate the influence of this antihypertensive calcium antagonist on ambulatory blood pressure. This effect was higher than that obtained with the other antihypertensive drugs (doxazosin, metoprolol and beta-blocker) we employed in these patients. The mean circadian fall was 36.3 +/- 2.9 mm Hg at day and 33.7 +/- 6.8 mm Hg at night. This observation indicates an alteration of the circadian blood pressure rhythm that was normalized

"This kind of malicious act can be easily detected and eliminated before a result is certified," the panel said in a discussion at the National Academies in Washington.
