Solute carrier family 6, member 14 (SLC6A14), also termed membrane-associated transcription factor site-specific recombination (AS3MT), has been demonstrated to be a key element regulating plasma homocysteine (Hcy) metabolism. A small prospective study suggested that plasma Hcy level was related to the risk of osteoporosis (OP) and proposed that BMD loss could be prevented by an Hcy-lowering therapy. This study was conducted to explore the role of SLC6A14 in Hcy-related OP. Endogenous SLC6A14 expression in the femurs of OP patients was significantly lower than that in the femurs of non-OP patients. To evaluate the potential benefit of SLC6A14 supplementation, a recombinant adenovirus (ad-SLC6A14) was constructed and was injected into OP rats via femoral vein. The ad-SLC6A14 administration significantly increased femur BMD. In addition, the overexpression of SLC6A14 can lead to a decrease in serum Hcy level. The femurs of control rats not injected with ad-SLC6A14 showed significantly higher BMD than those of rats injected with ad-empty virus (ad-empty). These results indicated that SLC6A14 is involved in the pathogenesis of OP and could be a potential therapeutic target for the prevention of OP and hyperhomocysteinemia.The effect of ketoprofen on the pharmacokinetics of dihydrocodeine after oral administration.
