Federal Government has bowed to pressure to cut air strikes in Iraq and Afghanistan, defying calls from Tony Abbott, Malcolm Turnbull and

Julie Bishop for a "pragmatic" approach to fighting Islamic State. But Mr Abbott and other Coalition MPs say the move will be a sign to the enemy that the opposition won the election and says Prime Minister Tony Abbott can't back down when he campaigned on putting troops in danger. "This is a pragmatic measure, it is a pragmatic decision, the coalition can't go back on what the voters voted for," Mr Abbott told Sky News on Monday.

"We are putting Australians' lives at a greater risk and it's not just at an ISIS risk, [it's] a risk to troops in Afghanistan and Iraq and elsewhere." In a rare display of bipartisanship, Mr Turnbull and Ms Bishop were also in favour of scaling back Australia's already small military presence in the Middle East. "I believe that action against ISIL is not an end of the world, but it is an action that is important, that is necessary, that is required for the protection of Australia, for the interests of Australia," Ms Bishop said. Despite the Opposition Leader's anger over the Coalition's decision, Mr Abbott said there were plenty of other areas where he disagreed with his Party colleagues.

"There is no question of any scales being pulled back on action against ISIL c6a93da74d
